I CANNOT say that I found yesterday very inspiring for writing, for going anywhere or doing anything but sitting around. How did you feel about it? It's quite true that the luncheon Mrs. Hutchie Scott gave for Elsie Hirst was lovely, and the party the Tunises had last night for Florence was great, but with it all it was damp, thoroughly damp. Every time I went out I felt damper and lower in spirits, though a garment of velvet and silk and fur, growing under the nimble fingers of Friend Dressmaker, did fill my soul with a bit of sunshine now and again.

And in the afternoon there was the A concert in the Academy foyer, and I must say my expectations in regard to the beauty of that wonderful place were fully realized. The lighting is simply wonderful and the acoustic properties marvelous. As for the room, words fail me. It really is gorgeous, Mr. and Mrs. Braun is simply wonderful planiste and Mr. Braun's fine voice is always a joy; but I could not take my eyes from the crystal mirrors, the amber lights, the blue chairs, the pale cream of the pillars and the dome. It was so warm, so rich and in such perfect taste.

I thought her eyes were blue for some reason, but they are not; they are head, with gold-brown glints in them. To me she is one of the most attractive Mrs. William E. Goodman, of 8860

You see, every me you know is taking part either in the movie, "Service," which Molly hayer wrote, or in the choruses, which seem so numerous I wonder what time in earth it will all be over, and whether e'll get home before morning or not, lowever, I expect it to be wonderfully etty and I would not miss it.

However, I expect it to be wonderfully pretty and I would not miss it.

T also hear that the Academy is almost sold out for the first performance and most of the seats taken for the second night as well. Isn't that fine? It's so encouraging to have people appreciate such strenuous efforts as those interested in the affair have made. I am dying to see Polly Thayer as a "vamp" and Harry Coxe as a "butler" and all the rest of them.

Is as Helen at the theatre the other afternoon with Margaret Curtis. She was looking very smart in a tweed suit, and what wonderful hair she has! It's golden and just waves about her face. And I should think it must be about two yards long.

She wears it in a sort of double figure eight, coiled at the back of her small.

I SAW Mrs. Ralph Earle on Chest-Inut street yesterday. To be sure, she was in her car, but I saw that she had on the best-looking suit of brown heather wool made on sports lines and with a narrow belt of the same material. She had a perfectly bewitching hat of brown. I think it was duvetyne, but the front, which was turned up off that face, was entirely covered with soft little rows of curled ostrich feathers. It was sort of tricornered in shape and most becoming.
